ENGLISH

The extent to which a student comprehends academic material is usually closely dependent upon his ability to understand spoken and written language. The extent to which a student succeeds in academic areas is usually closely related to the effectiveness with which he uses oral and written language. English is taught as a language, for its practical as well as its aesthetic values. Vocabulary development, mechanics of writing, correctness of expression, and reading comprehension are taught as practical uses of English for the student in his daily living. Reading, discussion, and analysis of various types of literature help develop an aesthetic appreciation of the language. Discussing and writing about literary works and about mass media contribute to the student's maturing in judgment about personal character, man's obligations to himself and to others, the environment in which he lives and his place in it, his awareness of the problems and successes of other people—and increase his power to think, and to express his thoughts clearly, coherently, logically.

LANGUAGES

The Foreign Language Department attempts to provide instruction in the four skills of speaking, listening compensation, reading and writing. Languages offered include French, Latin, and Spanish. Our courses are designed to satisfy the needs of those students who are preparing for college and of those who do not plan to go beyond high school language training. The student is given ample opportunity to develop his capacity to express himself in speech and writing, and to acquire reasonable comprehension of the spoken and written language. At the same time, in all of these learning activities we strive to stress the importance of the language itself as a vehicle for cultural understanding.

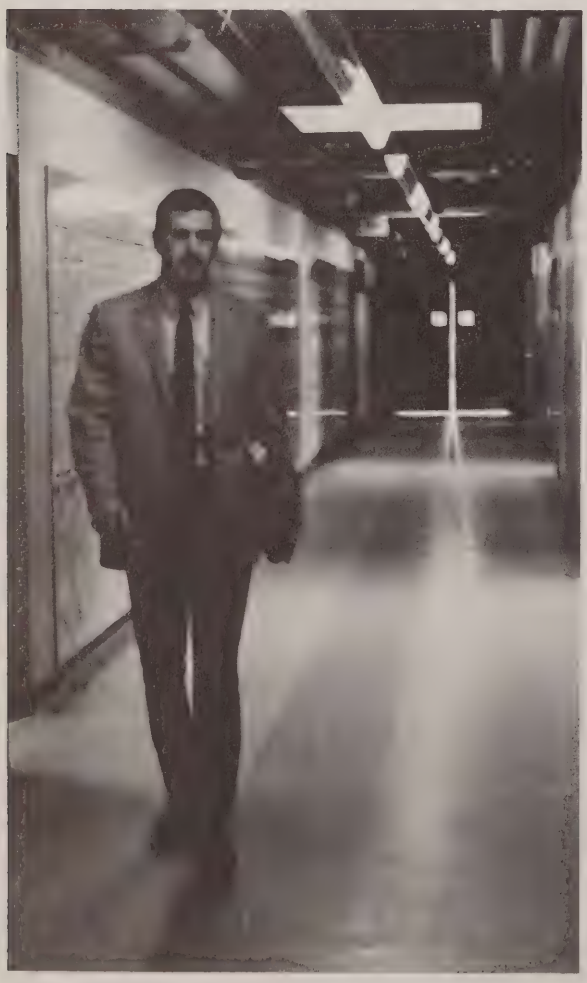
GUIDANCE

Guidance is an integral part of the high school curriculum. Counselors are available to help students understand their educational, vocational, and personal potentialities and opportunities. The main emphasis of the Guidance Department is on individual counseling. While all the students have regularly scheduled sessions, counselors are also available in the event that a particular problem arises. These conference sessions center around interests, possible courses of study, participation in extracurricular activities, and specific plans of the students beyond the high school level.



HISTORY

The primary aim of the History and Social Studies Department is to develop in the student an understanding of the importance of individual responsibility.

Individual responsibility is the power source which sets in motion the machinery of democracy.

Civics, World History, Problems in World Regional Geography, American History, Problems of Democracy, Economics, and Contemporary Civilization are the individual subject matter disciplines which are utilized to achieve the primary objective.

Malfunctions in the democratic machinery may be corrected by replacement or rebuilding of the defective part. For the particular source of power there is no substitute.

SCIENCE

Science is a way of life. It is a cultural force, for better or for worse, in today's technological society. To view science myopically as a sequence of subjects, from the general to the sublime, is to discount its fundamental relevance which extends far beyond the realm of textbooks and test tubes. But it is with these basic learning materials that one develops a more satisfying appreciation of this scientific age. And perhaps one of the fervid few will someday fashion a new cultural force with which to change the quality of life around us ... hopefully for the better. So remember science students, today PS 1, tomorrow the world!

MATH

In keeping with modern educational procedures, the Mathematics Department offers a wide selection of courses for students of varying interest and ability. The range is from Basic Mathematics for Grade 9 to The Calculus for Grade 12. The approach is modern in concept with emphasis on structure of the Mathematical System at the advanced levels and practical skills at the basic level. The curriculum is so structured that a student may elect a mathematics course in line with his abilities in each of his four years of high school.

ART

Art program offerings at D-R serve as interesting challenges to students interested in the art field. The variety of medias and projects, the scope of exploration in design, layout, and techniques, give students an excellent opportunity and basis for future art achievement. Major and minor schedules, "Mini" courses as well as field trips, assure creative people a most valuable art experience.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Courses in Industrial Arts offer work in both introductory and advanced fields of Mechanical Drawing, Metals and Woodworking. They promote the theoretical and physical aspects of industrial procedures. Students learn safe and proper handling of tools and develop an understanding of the fundamentals of making products from raw materials. In addition, a variety of experiments, lectures and field trips are offered within the scope of the curriculum. This is all intended to provide a wholesome concept of work, both individually and cooperatively.

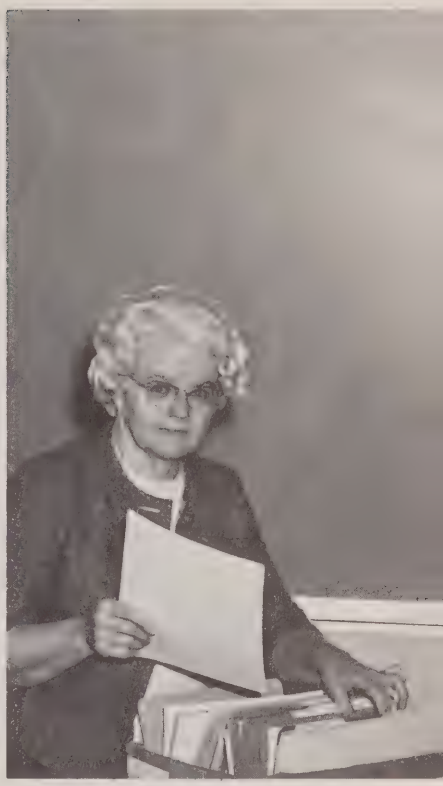
BUSINESS EDUCATION

Business Education consists of courses and activities in the area of business designed to meet the common needs of all students and the vocational needs of students who desire to prepare for employment in business. The courses are designed to develop knowledge, skills, habits, attitudes, and ideals necessary for successful beginning and advancement in business. Capable and interested students are assisted in planning and preparing for further education leading toward management and professional business positions.



HOME ECONOMICS

The Home Economics curriculum offers a variety of instruction in nutrition, foods, textiles, clothing, housing, home furnishing, management of time and money, the family and consumer buying.

Students have an opportunity to participate in discussion and independent studies that will benefit them in today's society. Elected courses are Foods I and II. Clothing I, II, III, Nutrition, Chef's Class, and Home and Family.

LIBRARY

As the informational center of the school, the library offers students and faculty a quantity of materials selected for distribution or use within the library and are chosen with the basic needs of the school curriculum in mind. Audio-visual aids, a listening area, fiction and non-fiction titles, and periodicals are examples of the constant effort to provide all with the knowledge needed for cultural growth.
